

ATLANTIS

This is ATLANTIS, a journal of postal Diplomacy, edited and published by Christopher Schleicher, 1535 Dartmouth Lane, Deerfield, Illinois 60015. ATLANTIS contains the variant games 1966 Alac, 1967 Vat (Imperialism VIII), and 1967 Mab (Princeps); and the regular Diplomacy game 1970 C. In addition to the four games currently running, there is one more regular Diplomacy game accepting players. Game fee for this game is $4.00 ($2.50 if IFW or NFFF Games Bureau), $1.00 off if you are already playing in an ATLANTIS game.

Subscriptions to ATLANTIS are 10 issues for $1.00. Single copy price is 15¢.

Margaret Gemignani, 1967 Vat (France) -- Since this game through the kindness of Payne has been returned to me, having been lost due to a mix-up in changing zine,
I will return it to him. /This has not been done--see above + page 1./ It is a shame to destroy such a fine game. I had asked for it to be returned in hopes of doing justice to Steve Perrin. Since he has not elected to take over and again allied with and since his successor isn't interested in doing so, the best /thing/would be return the game to the capable hands of Mr. Payne before it is too badly mutilated. Without /a/ strong ally it can't operate as it did before. Rather than kill it, I return it to Mr. Payne with my thanks.

I also thank the gamesmaster for his kindness in clearing this matter up.

Burdigala--The alleged map of "Atlantis" is further proof of Fayal's duplicity. Everyone knows that Atlantis was composed of ten concentric rings of land alternating with ten of water. As for liberating our nation, Fayal must be blind and deaf not to notice that we are sweating blood to liberate it from African tyranny.

Phewdia--Emperor Fayal was highly amused when he heard the latest of what passes for propaganda from Hispania. "Ten concentric rings!!!! Oh that's good! I knew Tillius had a hard time with maps, and now I see why. He must have an African double agent as a cartographer. If that's what he comes up with for maps, we don't have to worry much about an invasion from Hispania. They'd be lucky to find us at all!" The Emperor was heard to mutter "a big bull's eye--bull!" as he left on an inspection tour of his harem.

Bosphorus--Ivan Scarface, leader of the barbarian hordes, celebrated the victory over the civilized armies of Pontus in the usual way. After the barbecue, they spread out to look for food. When asked why he roasted his prisoners, Ivan replied, "Whad else was I gunna do wid em?" "Der too soft an weak to carry anything for morn'a cupla hours." "Dis way at least dey ennetain us!"

Chronicles of Atlantis -- II

King Miditl of Atlantis had decreed that Elysium was to be called "Lesser Atlantis", and as expected, few in Elysium agreed with the name. The town of Aous, once capitol of Elysium, was the center of the discontent. One of the most distressed was Hanno, a well-to-do dealer of metal tools. Hanno & Co. had built up a large trade with Atlantis in swords, spears, arrow points, etc., and was about to lose this when Miditl proclaimed that, among other things, all weapons made in Atlantis were property of the King. While Elysium was just an occupied territory, Hanno had done well. But now that his weapons were going to be taken by the Atlantean Army without being paid for....

Hanno's son Hoknam was as angry as his father. After all, while Elysium was separate from Atlantis and Hanno & Co. could deal profitably, there was a good chance Hoknam would inherit enough to make him rich. But these latest developments ruined his dream.

"What can I do? If this Miditl goes through with his plans Hanno & Co. will be ruined. And so will my future. The Atlantcan Army was the only outlet for Hanno & Co. arms -- where will we find another?" Hoknam was no fool. When he noticed how many friends of his were ready to fight Atlantis, he decided to do something. He began to stir up the people in Aous and the nearby villages by calling for them to rise up against the Atlantean troops in the town. When the people said they had nothing to fight the Atlanteans with, Hoknam would sell them the latest in the Hanno & Co. line of arms, with a patricic 10% discount.

The officers of the Atlantcan Army in Aous had disregarded the rumors of a rebel army forming. Until the rebels struck the heart of the garrison of Aous by nearly destroying the Officer's Bordel in a midnight raid. Their reaction was surprisingly swift.
